Overview

Hunter Walsh, a first-generation attorney, has been passionate about the law since childhood. Today, he channels that lifelong interest into diving deep into the unique aspects of every matter to chart the best possible path forward for his clients.

Hunter's legal career began before law school when he worked as a paralegal at a Raleigh firm, gaining valuable hands-on experience. He distinguished himself academically at NC Central University School of Law, graduating as Valedictorian and receiving Book Awards for Civil Procedure and Property. During law school, he served as Executive Editor of the NC Central Law Review, honing his legal writing and analytical skills.

Following graduation, Hunter clerked for Judge Donna Stroud at the North Carolina Court of Appeals, gaining valuable insight into appellate practice and judicial decision-making.

Outside of law, Hunter enjoys time with his extended family and is an avid sports fan, following ECU Pirates football and baseball and cheering for the Carolina Panthers. He is a history buff and enjoys keeping up with new movies and television shows.
