Overview

Headstrong and fiercely loyal, Lindsey Ross is the kind of person you want in your corner. Whether it's distilling and summarizing a complicated matter to unearth the core issues for a client, or making sense of complex situations within the legal system to help people reach resolution, she will tackle each matter head-on with diligence and resolve.

Her roots in law run deep, just like her binding ties with her family. The oldest of three siblings, Lindsey has always been independent and has had a proclivity to accomplish new things throughout her life. She has always had side jobs since she was younger—babysitting and setting aside her hard-earned cash until she could open a bank account—working at a tennis shop, tutoring, and eventually a law firm. Her interest in law began in high school, starting from a pivotal moment during a senior sermon at her church just before graduating. This same interest was piqued by her study of religious texts as a Religion major at Wake Forest. Lindsey figured that if she enjoyed analyzing ancient tomes, then becoming an attorney would capture her attention just the same.

In addition to visiting her favorite travel spots in her spare time (Swansboro in North Carolina and anywhere in Italy), Lindsey enjoys trying her hand at new recipes with her boyfriend, laughing with her Mom and sisters, spending time with family in her home of Eastern North Carolina to regain perspective, and playing golf and tennis to stay active.
