Overview

Rachel Jamroz embraces the challenge of encountering a wide range of legal matters, staying in tune with the complexities of civil litigation as she advocates for each of her clients. She is driven by her intellectual curiosity and finds fulfillment in solving complex issues to assist with every matter she handles.

Prior to joining the firm, she utilized her innate skills in national negotiation competitions while completing her juris doctorate at Campbell University. She also worked alongside the Raleigh DA developing criminal prosecution strategies and taking several criminal cases to trial. At the Raleigh Business Law Clinic, she provided valuable legal counsel to start-up businesses, drafting contracts, operating agreements, and various legal memoranda pro-bono.

Rachel is an avid traveler, having visited Switzerland, Italy, and Iceland, among others. She also spent a summer studying international law at Cambridge University, traveling to 7 different countries while doing so.

In her spare time, she enjoys reading, trying new restaurants, and spending quality time with her husband.
